

An Edwardian Tradition, Reimagined

At the turn of the 20th century, Collinson's Café on King Edward Street was one of Leeds' most elegant and fashionable meeting places, a refined Edwardian tearoom where the city gathered over fine leaf teas, freshly baked cakes and the gentle hum of conversation. Opened in the early 1900s and operated by Halifax coffee merchants, it became a beloved institution for more than half a century, known for its rich aroma of roasting coffee, crisp white tablecloths and the ritual of afternoon tea served on tiered stands.

Music drifted through the café each day, with a resident string quartet performing from the balcony above. Among them was Wallace Hartley, later immortalised as the bandleader of the RMS Titanic, whose connection to Collinson's remains one of the most poignant in the building's history.

Today, as you take your seat, our reimagined Afternoon C&C invites you to step back into that golden age of Leeds hospitality, where music, elegance and indulgence meet once more, and every detail pays homage to the historic spirit of Collinson's Café.
